The novel opens with Aunt Polly scouring the house in search of her nephew, Tom Sawyer. She finds him in the closet, discovers that his hands are covered with jam, and prepares to give him a whipping. Tom cries out theatrically, "Look behind you!" and when Aunt Polly turns, Tom escapes over the fence. After Tom is gone, Aunt Polly reflects sadly on Tom’s misconduct and knows she lets him get away with too much.

Tom comes home at suppertime in a very companionable mood. He has a great deal to say about his adventures. During supper, Aunt Polly tells Tom that he must be skipped school that afternoon and work on the levee. He is discouraged. He has not heard of the levee before, and it seems a place full of danger and sorrow. Tom is satisfied.

Tom goes out of the house in dispirited mood, the world is a vast and awful place, and Tom might as well move his manhood to one side and let the world march on. Tom is brown and dirty, and he has the air of one who has been out of doors.

When he returns home in the evening, Tom finds Aunt Polly waiting for him. She notices his dirtied clothes and resolves to make him work the next day, a Saturday, as punishment.

On Saturday morning, Aunt Polly sends Tom out to whiterush the fence. Jim passes by, and Tom tries to get him to do some of the whiterush, in return for a “white alley,” a kind of muzzle. Jim almost agrees, but Aunt Polly appears and chases him off, leaving Tom alone with his task.

Tom comes home at suppertime. His mother is not pleased, for he has been skipping school that afternoon and went everywhere before breakfast. Aunt Polly is satisfied, but Tom’s half-brother, Sid, has taken Tom’s place in the school. Tom has sworn the boy to secrecy about his adventures. During supper, Aunt Polly tells Tom she won’t be skipping school that afternoon and won’t ever again.

Tom goes out of the house into the back yard, where the chill is still strong, but fine. Tom’s half-brother, Sid, is busy with the chisel, trying to disguise his stolen watch. Tom has lost his watch.
